Summary of Information

The structure of interest previously reported on at the site is bulky, blocky, and has levels and sections; access is tightly controlled--reminds me of the (A/S) DIAC. Inside are people in rooms, as is also a turning, rounded object. The main purpose of this site seems to be thinking, sorting, organization. This place is not hardware-oriented, but has lots of "paperwork" sorts of things, involving decision making, directing, advising, authority, focusing, proponency, and other sorts of "intangible" purpose-related things. It is an official, government related "agency"--a centralized point for what it's responsible for. People refer to it for advice, and send it information about what they're doing, in return for overall guidance and standardized direction/correlation.
